Whereas the change in the structure of government of the Republic of Kenya has brought forward challenges in terms of allocating functions between the national and county governments.

The Constitution of Kenya, 2010 provides for the right to the highest attainable standard of health, which includes the right to health care services, including reproductive health care.

The Constitution also provides that no person shall be denied emergency medical treatment.

There is need to define the how national health policy shall be formulated, implemented and coordinated between the two levels of government.

There is also need to capture the developments in technology that can positive contribute to health care services while curbing negative developments.

There is need for coordination amongst the various health professions so as to harness capacity and enhance relevance of the service to the health industry.

The Health Bill seeks to achieve the following:

1) Establishment of a national health authority to undertake functions of formulating and coordinating national health policy.

2) To establish a Council for Health Professions as a facilitative forum for professions.

3) To establish a Research Committee to spearhead research in health research.

4) To provide for the use of science and human tissue to advance health objectives.

5) To provide for inspection of health facilities by regulatory bodies.

6) To define the functions of national government and devolved functions of the county government.

7) To provide for devolution of health human resource to the County and for human resource planning.
